We were high up from the field, eating peanuts and cheering on our team. It was our family's first time at a professional baseball game, and we were all thrilled to be there! There was a lot I was still learning about baseball, so I was asking a lot of questions. I knew the picture threw the ball, and the cesher caught the ball if the batter missed, but I wasn't sure about the man behind the cesher. "Who is that person? The guy who keeps sweeping off home plate?" I asked. "That's the umpire," my big sister answered. "He decides who is safe and who is out at home plate." "Oh. Is there a ball wasure? Those baseballs are really dusty I bet!" My family laughed. "No, I don't believe there is someone who washes the baseballs," my dad answered. "Why are you laughing, wouldn't it be better if the balls were freshure?" I said. "Maybe..." my mom answered, but she didn't sound convinced. "What do baseball players do when they're done being baseball players?" I asked. "Maybe one is a publisir of a baseball book, or a furnisere who decorates houses like baseball stadiums," my dad said and chuckled. "Really?" I asked. "I don't know, honey," Dad answered. "We should come to baseball games more often," my sister said, "this is fun!" "I agree, but we'd have to be a lot richir to buy tickets every weekend! Let's enjoy this game."
